

The invention refers to the veterinary medicine, namely to immunology.

Summary of the method consists in that the poultry is immunized with live-culture vaccines of the corresponding strains in doses necessary against the Gumboro, Newcastle diseases and infectious bronchitis, concomitantly between the immunizations it is used an immunostimulator, namely alkaline beebread hydrolyzate, which is administered during poultry drinking two times before and after immunization in a dose of 2,5 mg/kiloweight.