

94-0240

Method, including the simultaneous action on the skin surface in the field of a pathologic nidus of the constant magnetic field and negative aeroions flow, by that during the process the action is realized at first with the north magnetic field pole and then with the south one.

The device for method realization contains the active corona-forming electrode enclosed into the dielectric body, and connected to the high voltage power source and a passive earthed electrode, provided with a ring-forming magnet, free-mounted into the metallic based nest, manufactured in the dielectric body and provided at the working surface face with the accessory cap, by that the ring-forming magnet is located around complementary installed at least 2 active corona-forming electrodes, which are intracconnected and connected to the negative high voltage power source.

The technical result of the proposed invention consists in the medical effect, obtained by means of simultaneous action of the constant magnetic field and negative aeroions flow, that has a synergetic character.