

95-0212

The invention relates to the cocking up articles and may be utilized in the manufacturing process of the corks, for corking up wines, brandy, champagne, juices; in perfumery industrie for corking up perfumes, eau-de-Colognes; in chemical industrie for corking up the extremely aggressive media.

The cork contains a cap with a cylindrical side. The peculiarity of the represented cork consists in the fact, that the cap is feeted with a chip and a diaphragm, the chip being feeted with a pickup, and the diaphragm being setted up on the outside of the cap.

The technical result in the invention's utilization consists in the appearance of a sound signal when uncorking the vessel.