

97-0155

The invention relates to the technique of manufacturing the thin and superthin microwire in the glass insulation.

The process consists in the fact that for manufacturing the microwire there is selected an insulation material and a metal with approximative equal viscosity during the melting. The finished microwire is complementary heated and stretched regulating the effort and velocity.