

98-0002

The invention relates to medicine, particularly to surgical hepatothology and may be used for surgical correction of ascitic syndrome at the hepatic cirrhosis.

The method comprises a separation and mobilization of intern jugular, separation of the thoracic lymphatic duct in the left venous angle and mobilization thereof the full length of the cervical part with crossing of all the afferent branches of this portion.

The technical result consists in increasing the cervical portion gap of the thoracic lymphatic duct and vascular tone regeneration.

Claims: 1