

The invention refers to the separating devices, particularly to a membrane module for separators with one or more tubular membranes, and may be used for pasty mixtures separation.

The module contains tubular membranes reeled up in the form of wraps and making up a coil. In that way, the membrane total surface per volume unit is increasing, the mounting process is simplified and the conditions of processing the pasty mixtures possessing a high content of dry materials are being improved.