

99-0264

The invention relates to the wine-making industry, namely to processes for the production of mature alcoholic drinks of brandy type.

Summary of the invention consists in dividing the wine alcohol into two parts, adding to one part constituting 10...30% of the total volume, of 70...100% of the oak extract volume, after what follows maturation and blending with the wine alcohol and oak extract remains.

The technical result of the invention consists in the improvement of organoleptic properties of the proposed drink.